MINNESOTA INDIAN RESOURCES DIRECTORY, SECOND EDITION

THE MINNESOTA INDIAN AFFAIRS COMMISSION WISHES TO COMMEND THE UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA for the second edition of the Minnesota Indian Resources Directory, published by the Training Center for Community Programs.

Organizations operating in the Indian Community are many and varied, and evidence constant changes in personnel and organizational structures. It is, therefore, quite difficult to develop a truly accurate, updated publication. This Directory is an attempt to compile all current information available from the many groups in Minnesota; organizations that we have somehow overlooked can be added to the directory in the future. For now, we have collected what we think is the most current listing available for the Minnesota area.

We wish to thank the University of Minnesota in cooperating with the Indian Affairs Commission to publish this issue and make it available to the Indian community.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Many people have put a great deal of time and effort into compiling this Minnesota Indian Resources Directory. Special thanks is extended to Katy Dayton, who gathered most of the information for the Directory; Linda Murdock and Callie Swartz, who helped finish up the Directory; and Sue Leonard, our typist, without whom we would not have gotten the Directory published.

Special acknowledgement is also made to G. William Craig, who gave information on many of the organizations, and Arthur M. Harkins, Richard G. Woods, and I. Karon Sherarts, who wrote the Introduction to the Directory.

It is with pleasure that the Center for Urban and Regional Affairs publishes this Directory in cooperation with the Minnesota Indian Affairs Commission. Both wish to extend sincere thanks to all the organizations represented in this Directory for their complete cooperation in compiling this information.

In order to keep this Directory up-to-date, we request that all organizations mentioned herein send to us periodically information that has changed. It is commonplace that as soon as a Directory is published, it is out-of-date the same day. Please cooperate with us to keep this Directory as up-to-date as possible. Our address is:

City Indians and Social Programs:
A Minnesota Overview

Introduction

Indian Americans who have chosen to migrate to urban areas are not a new city population. As early as 1928, the so-called "Meriam Report" devoted a lengthy chapter to these Indians and made several recommendations as to how agency services could be improved to better meet their needs. Assuming that "general social and economic forces" would continue to cause Indians to migrate to cities and industrial centers, the writers of the Meriam Report suggested that the Indian Service should set up the appropriate mechanisms for keeping close statistical watch on migrating Indians. The researchers presented two justifications for this suggestion:

The first reason is that the evidence thus secured will furnish the basis for the modification and development of educational resources, such as schools and the other activities maintained by the government, to fit Indians to meet life in the face of white civilization. The second reason is that the Indian Service can render an invaluable service to migrated Indians in aiding them to become established in and adjusted to their new environment. In the case of reservations possessed of meagre economic resources and opportunities, it may even prove advisable for the government deliberately to adopt a policy looking toward expediting this movement to such industrial communities as afford fullest opportunities for labor and development.

Events did lead to the generation of government programs for accelerating Indian migration to the cities and, following other recommendations by the Meriam Report, these programs took little notice of inherent opportunities to develop Indian leadership in the cities through Indian centers and the like, but instead chose to set up or expand BIA facilities to manage the urban side of the Relocation and Employment Assistance programs. The Meriam Report concluded that to expand Indian centers in the urban environment to include service capacities for the assistance of migrating Indians would be to impede the inevitable and appropriate assimilation of the Indian "race" into the white "race". However, others have since called for the expansion of Indian urban centers to include a capacity to provide services for incoming migrants. One such suggested program is reproduced may be expected to alter the educational, social, and economic lives of many Indian Americans in this region.

Not all Indians display this propensity to migrate. Data from house-to-house surveys in the Near North and Near South sides of Minneapolis, for example, suggest that there is another, more stable Indian population in the Twin Cities which is less likely to change its residence. The difference is strong enough to suggest that the two populations are quite distinctly different.

Surely an experimental city located in Minnesota would attract some Indian residents. If history is an accurate guide, such a city might anticipate facing many of the acculturation problems of this minority group. More knowledge about the phenomenon of migration and about the factors influencing stable city residence are needed.

Before meaningful social programs can be designed to meet the needs of Indian Americans, much more must be known about these migratory patterns. The provision of education for Indian children, the employability potentials of Indian adults, the eligibility of Indians for health and welfare services, and the extent to which Indians can expect to become a part of a predominantly white society depend in large part upon these cultural habits of mobility. From existing data it is evident that substantial numbers of Indian migrants come from or return to White Earth, Mille Lacs, Red Lake, and Leech Lake Reservations. What is not clear is the scope and frequency of urban-reservation, reservation-urban, and inter- and/or intra-city movement as well as the factors which induce Indians to assume relatively permanent households in urban or rural settings.

This proposal suggests a demonstration and research program designed to:

1. determine the scope and nature of Minnesota Indian migration patterns;
2. ascertain the relevant social services these migration patterns require;
3. meet the social service needs of mobile Indians;
4. attempt an assessment of the possible meaning of these migratory patterns and, to some extent, the services applicable to them, for general rural-urban population movements;
5. make specific applications of the findings of this program to such developing projects as the Minnesota Experimental City and similar efforts:
In Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth, and Superior, and to a lesser extent, in Milwaukee, there are many mixed bloods. In fact one gets the impression in St. Paul and Minneapolis that most of the persons claiming to be Indians have but a slight degree of Indian blood. From "lists of Indians" furnished by the several reservations, many were reached whose personal appearance indicated French or Scandinavian blood rather than Indian. In a number of cases a claim of only one-sixteenth, one-thirty-second, or one-sixty-fourth Indian blood was made, yet great insistence was put upon the right to be designated "Indian." [Emphasis added.]

The Meriam Report concluded that a great range of income and life styles characterized these Minnesota urban Indian populations, and that the break from reservation life had been rather complete for them:

The range in standards of living follows economic rather than racial lines. Indians newly arrived are found in cheaply furnished rooming houses with rents comparatively high, or scattered through low rent neighborhoods in cheap flats of one, two, or three rooms in buildings where conditions are somewhat below a reasonable standard of living. Numbers of other well established wage earners are rather attractively housed in pleasant one- or two-family dwellings in better sections. Some of the more successful have attractive homes in the less expensive suburbs.

The Meriam Report noted that Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Duluth Indian migrants were "apparently . . . not isolated nor . . . barred from participation in the social or recreational life that their economic condition (permitted)." The report cited parks, beaches, motion picture theaters, and other commercial amusement places as freely-used services by urban Indians. "Bridge parties and other evening gatherings in Indian homes are sometimes exclusively Indian, but not always. Home entertaining is facilitated by pianos, phonographs, and radios which are not uncommon in these city homes."

The Meriam Report noted that even in 1928 associations set up to deal specifically with enrollment rights and property rights on the reservations had been formed by Indians in Minneapolis and St. Paul. The report stated that "The Indians in the other Minnesota cities are interested in the sentatives as hearers and speakers, and for this reason claim that they need organizations and associations of their own." [Emphasis added.] 10

Even in 1928 migrated Indians were, according to the Meriam Report, "not immune to the influence of glib (non-Indian) talkers who attempt to secure their support" for various enterprises, some of them related to the mass media. Furthermore, "they are at the mercy of all kinds of attorneys who assure them of the validity of various apparently fantastic claims." The Meriam Report stated that even better educated city Indians were "as susceptible as are reservation Indians to any leadership which offers itself with expressions of kindliness or partisanship." In one particularly telling passage, the report stated that:

As one (respondent) expressed it, "the Indians have confidence in those who damn the people they damn, and the people the Indians damn are those in the Indian Bureau." Because they play upon past wrongs in the handling of Indian affairs and can cite present instances of injustice, unscrupulous persons without intention to deal with present problems, or incompetent persons who can get no further than talk and agitation have practically as much chance to secure leadership as have intelligent, interested Indians and whites with the intention, ability, and resources for the study and prosecution of legitimate claims through proper channels. [Emphasis added.] 11

Recognizing that various styles of Indian and white leadership resulted in several conflicting perspectives and offers of solutions for urban Indian problems, and that there were, indeed, differences in sophistication levels among both whites and Indians regarding such matters, the Meriam Report concluded that some Indian "passivism as to the acceptance by the government of any Indian ideas which involve real innovation or reconstruction" was leading to a sense among Indians that real cooperation with their reservation people must be developed in order to "seek by group action and expression to correct certain existing wrongs." The report then concluded its lengthy chapter on migrated Indians by setting forth some of the suggestions advanced by Indians and others for the general improvement of life among both city and reservation Indians. The objectives were "listed without discussion of their merits." 12 social agencies. Despite the fact that St. Paul and Duluth are also developing such Indian agencies, Minneapolis has traditionally shown far more activity in this regard. Indeed, it is quite possible that Minneapolis Indians are the most organizationally active urban Indian people in the United States — even when urban Indian populations of far greater size are considered.

Recently, Richard G. Woods and Arthur M. Harkins commented upon the needs of migrating Indians in Minnesota and suggested that many problems exist in meeting them by white agencies:

A commonly-voiced concern among professionals who operate the major institutions in Minneapolis is that agency efforts to reach the Indian population are often unsuccessful. Part of the difficulty may stem from the fact that Minnesota Indians living on reservations have a limited number of institutions with which to relate (for example, county welfare, the BIA, the Public Health Service, and the Indian Community Action Program), and the patterns of interaction are often personalized and relatively uncomplicated. A move to Minneapolis introduces the necessity to establish fresh relationships with new, larger, and somewhat impersonal institutions in a setting which often demands aggressive pursuit of services by Indian clients. Current policy of the Bureau of Indian Affairs prescribes a "hands off" attitude toward urban Indians, except for those who have been relocated from a reservation under the Employment Assistance Program. Interviews, tests, referrals, forms to be completed, appointments to be kept, and regulations to be followed — the purposes for which are not always clear — intrude to arouse old suspicions and hostilities, and many urban Indians respond to the typically non-Indian agency setting with perceptions of being blocked by "red tape" and of being given the "run around". Because of such factors as low income and recent arrival in the city, many Indians seeking agency services need emergency help with such matters as employment, housing, medical care and welfare, and delays and impediments caused by agency policy and location are often resented.

Agency managements have evidenced strong concern about reaching the Indian population. Conventional ways of relating to minority populations such as outreach, outstationing personnel in the minority community, and employment of minority persons themselves are rather generally in use, but there is some indication that these measures are not sufficient.

... accommodation of this population to urban life seems to call for a dual change — the change of institutions and the change of some population behavioral characteristics. Such

| NATURE & PURPOSE & OBJECTIVES | The Ad Hoc Committee was appointed by Assistant Vice-President Fred E. Lukermann in March, 1969 to write a proposal for a department of American Indian Studies. In May, the Committee presented its proposal to the administration outlining five specific goals of the American Indian Studies Department. The other charge to the committee was to review all University and community related Indian programs and make suggestions as to how to coordinate and expand those programs. Out of this review, the Center for Indian Development was established. |

Enrolled student should contact his advisor. Contact office for information about new courses or Dr. Frank Miller, Acting Chairman of Advisory Committee - 373-2601

NATURE & PURPOSE & OBJECTIVES
The principle goals of the Department are: to offer undergraduate education, including a B.A. degree in American Indian Studies; and to offer upper division and graduate students courses that will contribute to their training in education, law, medicine, public health, social work, and other professional fields. The Department will also act as a resource base for programs conducted in cooperation with Indian communities and organizations.

The Department will propose a major sequence of courses in 1970-71 when enough courses have been developed. The major will consist of two categories of courses: (1) core courses in American Indian Studies; and (2) supporting courses in other departments of CLA and other colleges.

ELIGIBILITY
Any student wishing to major in American Indian Studies, and enrolled in the University of Minnesota.

| The Broken Arrow Service Guild is an organization of Indian and non-Indian women open to all ages, races, colors, and creeds. It was organized to promote friendship among Indian and non-Indian women through programs of sewing, social events, and special projects. They make quilts, and provide pajamas, play clothes, and other necessities for needy Indian children who attend summer camps. They hold two fund-raising projects each year to raise funds for their Student Aid Fund for students of American Indian ancestry. The guild meets at the Plymouth Congregational Church in Minneapolis every Thursday from 10 a.m. till 3 p.m. except during the summer.

Information

Gene Eckstein, Director

Nature & Purpose & Objectives

The goal of the program is to insure greater understanding of and commitment to the formal education process on the part of Indian children and their parents. To reach this goal, the program works with 7th - 10th grade Indian students located in Phillips and Franklin Junior Highs. Tutoring, recreation, educational tours, outings are provided for the student while he attends school. During the summer, a concentrated program is held away from the city to provide an educational and recreational stimulus to these students and assist those having special problems. Parents are involved on all levels of the program and make up the Board of Directors which runs the program. Seminars are given to teachers in these schools and other interested people each academic year.

Eligibility

Indian students who will enter the 7th grade thru 10th grade, preferably from Phillips and Franklin Junior Highs.

NAME

INFORMATION
Larry Bisonette, Director

NATURE & PURPOSE & OBJECTIVES
Project STAIRS is a tutorial service for 1st through 6th grade Indian students from 14 inner-city elementary and 4 parochial schools in Minneapolis.

Its primary purpose is to combat the high rate of Indian high school dropouts in the city by providing remedial help, reinforcing classroom learning and also providing motivation to remain in school until graduation.

The over-all objective of STAIRS is to increase the level of education and aspiration of American Indian children from low-income families in a tutorial program based on a one-to-one approach. The tutor and child develop a "big brother" or "big sister" relationship, and broaden the child's cultural understanding by taking him to museums, art institutes, libraries, theaters, etc. It offers an extensive American Indian cultural enrichment program to all children and tutors, with parental involvement.

NATURE & PURPOSE & OBJECTIVES

This committee is working in conjunction with other health science departments at the University, and has received funds in conjunction with the Medical School. They are attempting to recruit Blacks, American Indians, and disadvantaged whites, although the main emphasis is on the American Indians. The area they are trying to cover includes Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota. Their hope is that, by making more minority students aware of dental professions, the likelihood that some may enter the profession will be increased. They have various plans underway to expose the students to the dental profession, such as directly contacting school counselors, American Indian tribal representatives, social workers, and youth workers, in order that these people will be encouraged to arouse interest in the dental profession. In addition, they have summer work programs where the students are allowed to work in the dental lab at the University, thereby increasing their exposure to the field. This committee is flexible and will try to fulfill special requests of any interested group, such as providing tours of their department, or going out to give talks and demonstrations.

ELIGIBILITY

Any interested minority or disadvantaged student

INFORMATION

The Tenants Union grew out of specific complaints about poor housing conditions, sudden rent increases and other objectionable management practices. The functions of the union are as follows:

1. Distribution of copies of "If You Pay Rent You've Got Rights, Too", which explains the City Housing Maintenance Code

2. Provides detailed additional information about housing practices, helps tenants make and follow-up complaints to the Housing Inspectors

3. Helps tenants relocate

4. Serves as a referral agency to Legal Aid

5. Helps organize tenants organization

The stated purpose of the Tenants Union is organization and development of tenant organizations on the neighborhood and city-wide level, which would secure changes in unfair policies.

The Minnesota Law Review consists of a group of law students who are organized to publish a publication by that same title, and which comes out six times a year. The publication is subscribed to by many lawyers in the state of Minnesota, and also by lawyers throughout the United States. It is a research publication made available to the attorneys.

The Minnesota Law Review is conducting an empirical study of legal problems relating to Indians. The study will be conducted over the summer and fall, and published in the Minnesota Law Review next winter. The focus will be on Hennepin County and two or three reservations. Indians in Minneapolis and on the reservations will be surveyed to determine their attitudes toward the legal system and any alternate problem solving methods they may have developed. Community leaders, including members of the legal community, will also be interviewed to ascertain their attitudes and opinions of the law as it relates to Indians. Court records in Hennepin County and in the reservation areas will be analyzed also. As a result of this study, it may be possible to recommend legislative reform, additional legal aid facilities, or educational programs, which will make the legal system more relevant and available to the Indian.

Application is open to everybody in the second and third years of law study. Applicants are then screened according to their ability to write on legal problems.

NATURE & PURPOSE & OBJECTIVES
The Neighborhood Youth Corps is presently re-structuring their concept and program. The following information refers to the concept that will be in effect July 20, 1970.

The program is designed to provide educational and work experience for high school dropouts. It aims at giving them an opportunity to gain a marketable skill through training and to further their educations.

The objectives of the program, in order of priority, are:
1. To help provide a transition back to high school;
2. In cases when the youth has the appropriate potential, to help him secure entrance into a post-secondary school or community college; and
3. To provide the best skill or semi-skill preparation as well as reading skills, in order to gain the ability to compete in the open job market.

ELIGIBILITY
The program is open to high school dropouts from Hennepin County who fit the OEO poverty income guidelines, and who are aged 16-17.

STAFF
Under the new program, there will be six full-time staff members, as well as a psychiatric consultant on call, a part-time secretary, and a part-time bookkeeper.

MEMBERSHIP
The program is open to 40 youth at any one time

NATURE & PURPOSE & OBJECTIVES
The Older Worker Specialist is a particular class of interviewer with the Minnesota Department of Manpower Services, who is responsible for providing employment services to job applicants over the age of 45. This project seeks to improve the level of effectiveness of the OWS through increased sensitivity of the problems of the older worker as well as increased use of community resources as a result of increased awareness toward the older worker.
The project will ultimately provide a training manual to

| INFORMATION | Arthur M. Harkins, Coordinator |
| NATURE & PURPOSE & OBJECTIVES | The TCCP, originally established as the Training Center for Delinquency Prevention and Control in 1963, was funded by a division of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. However, an Indian Affairs Center was one of the projects of TCCP. In March of 1968, the office became the Center for Urban and Regional Affairs, and became engaged exclusively with several types of programs related to American Indians in the Upper Midwest. The three areas under which most activities fall are 1) program conception and design, 2) program evaluation and basic research, and 3) community participation. Programs falling under CURA, and covered separately in this directory include Project Indian Upward Bound, Project STAIRS, and the Center for Indian Development. Other Indian programs with which CURA is concerned include the Department of American Indian Studies, the National Study of American Indian Education, the Cultural Education Specialist Program, the Indian Inmate Education Program, urban Indian research in the Midwest, and assistance to state, county and city agencies. |

NATURE & PURPOSE & OBJECTIVES

TTT is a program that seeks to improve education in the inner city schools of the Twin Cities, principally by improving the quality of instruction in programs that train teachers for inner city school classrooms. Cooperating in the venture are the University of Minnesota, the Minneapolis and St. Paul public schools, and the community, which has as its representatives 24 citizens on the TTT Policy Board of Directors. Other participants are the State Board of Education, St. Paul Archdiocese, and these colleges: Augsburg, Concordia, Moorhead, Moorhead State, St. Catherine's, St. John's, St. Olaf, and the University of Minnesota/Morris. There are four divisions of TTT, each with specific duties. The policy board initiates projects, and selects participants for the various sections of the projects. The strategy committee assists the institution's existing programs with the help of a TTT participant team, and works with the team in designing and instituting educational methods. The project staff organizes and arranges the programs for the participants. The participant teams themselves observe various schools in an attempt to gain a sense of the problems and a feeling for solving them. They serve as resource people for the participating institutions, and they participate in many community and instructional activities. The teams meet with the strategy committees to provide information and advice.
