ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This directory is the responsibility of an ad-hoc committee whose members are listed below. To all who contributed time and talent, information and insight, thank you.

A special thanks is due to Barbara Rose, a graduate student in Library Science at the University of Minnesota, who collected and compiled the information as a research assistant with the University's Center for Urban and Regional Affairs.

Initial publication costs were covered by the West Bank Ministry of the United Presbyterian Church, U.S.A. and the Greater Minneapolis Council of Churches. Money received from the sale of the directory will be used for additional copies and subsequent editions.

INTRODUCTION

A CAVEAT

This directory is a beginning. It is an initial effort at drawing together information on church funding sources at the local, regional and national levels for local social change organizations. The directory is not comprehensive. It does not list all funding sources of those denominations included here; a local group working closely with an individual denomination will uncover sources not mentioned here. Nor is this directory a listing of every religious group which has funds for local social change organizations. If the need for a more comprehensive directory is recognized, perhaps a more formal method of compiling such a directory will be established.

A WARNING

This directory can be easily misunderstood. It is important to remember that churches are not like other funding sources. With several important exceptions—such as the Campaign for Human Development of the U.S. Catholic Conference and the Minnesota Episcopal Foundation—churches have generally not developed a process to deal formally with a large number of requests from community groups. Instead, most of the churches listed here have concentrated their support on those issues of social justice with which their own members have become involved. In other words, when looking for the support of any church, the value of personal contacts within that church cannot be overemphasized. This directory is a listing of where these contacts might begin. For more information on this point, please see page 3.

DEFINITIONS

When dealing with a wide diversity of churches, questions of translation and definition abound. What is a "synod" to one is a "conference" to another, a "parish" to one is a "congregation" to another. When dealing with the concern for social justice, this problem of language is compounded. What one official calls "social justice" is "social change" to another, to another "empowerment," another "self-development," another "human development." In compiling this directory, the following definition borrowed from the Cooperating Fund Drive was used:
Social change organizations work to enable people to achieve fuller participation in the life of society by eliminating social, economic, cultural or political barriers.

Each source listed in this directory as providing support for local social change organizations has established a permanent process for providing, at least annually, a minimum of $500 to one or more social change organizations working primarily at the local—neighborhood or municipal—level.

THE METHOD

Contacts were made with 22 of the larger national religious organizations represented in the Twin Cities metropolitan area.* A variety of information sources were used to identify potential funds within each of these organizations at any of three levels: 1) the national or international; 2) the state or regional, often referred to as the judicatory; 3) the local congregation. At least one personal or phone interview was conducted with representatives at each of these levels for each of the 14 organizations included in this directory. Questionnaires were mailed to those offices where information obtained from interviews was either incomplete or ambiguous. For verification, information on each organization included in this directory was sent for review to at least one person familiar with that church or denomination. In addition, information was also collected on 10 Catholic religious orders, 6 national ecumenical organizations and 3 local ecumenical councils. Of all the denominations contacted, those for whom information is included in this directory are listed in the contents.

THE FORMAT

The directory is arranged alphabetically by the name of the national church or denomination. Classification by national, regional and local sources of funding exists as a sub-arrangement. A resource person is listed for each church or denomination. If you are totally unfamiliar with a denomination but want to explore the possibility of support from them, a conversation with this contact person would be an appropriate place to start for information and referrals. Religious orders are included under Roman Catholic and arranged alphabetically. Ecumenical organizations are included in a separate section and arranged similarly. The directory concludes with a brief bibliography of information on fundraising and other directories.

*These are listed in the Index, pages 100-104.
See Appendix for a copy of the questionnaire, pages 97-99.
SUGGESTIONS FOR USING THIS DIRECTORY

As already mentioned, the importance of establishing personal contacts cannot be overemphasized. This is true for all fundraising. It is especially important to remember when dealing with churches. Many congregations in the Twin Cities area are very reluctant to take official positions—through formal action of the entire congregation—on specific issues of social justice. On the other hand, many of these same congregations have individual members, one or more committees, and/or clergy who are interested and involved in social justice and community development activities. Regardless of whether a proposal is directed at the local, regional or national level, the endorsement, if not the active involvement, of these persons and local committees is invaluable. In other words, to approach a local church as a potential source of only money, instead of people and money, may be a serious mistake. As a voluntary organization, active participation by local members is the lifeblood of all churches. The more a project involves these members, the more significant that project is to the church’s funding mechanisms.

Contact with local church members is also a helpful introduction to the language, organizational structure and priorities of that particular church. Some local churches have established procedures for grant applications including guidelines and strict deadlines, while others have a more informal committee process or may disperse grants through discretionary funds assigned to the pastor. Regardless of how formal or informal the procedure, a local congregation will often base its grant-making decisions on recommendations of a committee or an individual member who is working with, or familiar with, a specific group seeking funds. Contacts at the local level can also provide access to introductions to the appropriate staff at the regional or judicatory level.

Most churches carry out their programs through the local and national offices. The judicatory serves as the communications and coordinating level between the local and national levels. Some churches require formal review and endorsement by the judicatory for all grant proposals submitted to the national organization; others do not. In either case, the support of judicatory staff only adds to the strength of the proposal. Judicatory executives can also be a source of valuable information about other resources within the denomination. Many churches, particularly at the national level, have staff assigned to work on a variety of social justice issues. Some churches at the local, judicatory and/or national levels also make a wide variety of in-kind contributions to groups they support.
A REQUEST

On page 105 there is a blank form. If you have secured church funds for a local social change organization through a religious office not listed here, we ask that you share this information with others by filling out the blank form and mailing it to the Greater Minneapolis Council of Churches, 122 W. Franklin Avenue, Minneapolis, MN 55404. We also ask that you do the same through October 1, 1983 if you find any of the information in this directory to be inaccurate. The accuracy and usefulness of the directory will depend in great part on whether this request is honored. Sincere thanks for your cooperation.
